

NESSA O' MAHONY

Bar Talk

Nessa O'Mahony

Attribution-NonCommercial-NoDerivs 2.5

You are free:

- to copy, distribute, display, and perform the work

Under the following conditions:

Attribution. You must attribute the work in the manner specified by the author or licensor.

Noncommercial. You may not use this work for commercial purposes.

No Derivative Works. You may not alter, transform, or build upon this work.

- For any reuse or distribution, you must make clear to others the license terms of this work.
- Any of these conditions can be waived if you get permission from the copyright holder.

Your fair use and other rights are in no way affected by the above.

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-NonCommercial-NoDerivs 2.5 License

<http://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-nc-nd/2.5/>

For full license see the end of this document

Original copyright notice:

Cover illustration: Brian Palm First Edition
Printed by Cahill Printers © Nessa O'Mahony & iTaLiCs Press, 1999
ISBN 0 9533325 1 9
An iTaLiCs Press Publication
PO Box 6598
Dublin 20

for Peter Salisbury

Contents

Barfly
Triple Exposure
Gallery
Memoriam
Grafton Street, January 1996
Five Nations
Pauline's Pilgrimage
Waterbaby
Flute-fixing In McNeill's Of Capel Street Set 'Em Up, Joe
Time Passing On The 2.15
I Amn't Getting Old
The Queen of Number 63
Going Home
Language Lessons In A Churchtown Chipper Smithfield Saturday
Inis Maan at Noon
Keepsake
After
Silly Me ...
Some Day
Sancreed Well
At Bandelier, New Mexico
I Looked At You Today
Portrait of the Artist's Mother
Only Silence
Margaret's Bar
Old Maids' Tales
The Carer
Bedtime in Commons Road
Kelp
Aran Wedding
The Mourners
Remembering Jack
Lament For A Shy Man
Wicklow Gap, Easter 1998
Slipping Skin
Death of a Walnut Tree
Good Friday Gift
Just Another Saturday
Bar Talk

Barfly

A good view of the to and fro-ing at the bar, staring at the orders given, weighing prospects for Bacardi drinkers, divining meanings if he slips a short before carrying the mixer down.

Glass, half-full, mid-way on the counter to the next empty spot.
Take a nip, check the door at frequent intervals, though not the watch.

The stool stays free, light up unassisted, eyes hazing in the smoke of Silkcut Purple, idling with the beer mat I've already shred.

Triple Exposure

A joke told by the February sun projects a triple image on the pane.
Three outlines which become divergent, take on traits I've seen before.

The first shifts slightly so I glimpse her face, not as I saw it last, waxed, chin propped by plastic on the hospice bed, but lit with that old mockery, her sly appraisal as a fag glows dangling from her mouth and she eyes her winning hand at 25, proffering her tumbler for the umpteenth time, always warning "Sure, don't let it dhrown."

The second comes to view, the outline harder as she sits, limbs steeled and held erect by a hundred years and more of making do.
Sardonic in repose her lips will soften to recount the latest news of some relation, small eyes grey with irony even after cataracts have left her without sight.
She never takes a drop, tells how once a sip of sherry robbed her of her breath.

The last one waits until I notice her.
I try to stop the details merging with my own but cannot tell if those wry lips are hers or mine, or who should claim that stubborn curve of chin, the eyes that hide the hurt within their depth.
She slips away, fades into the familiar as light changes once again, leaving a film of dust to blur the pane.

Gallery

for Conal

You've made a pattern of your history, selecting pieces with mosaic-maker's skill.

Each frame encapsulates a memory: old lovers posed by lakesides, families grouped in kitchens or clasping arms in churchyards, pals with unlikely haircuts and self-conscious smiles.

Later, you point out the gap
I'd fit into.
Dizzy with gratitude (and the lateness of the hour) I wish someone could take my picture, now, at the moment that you called me friend.

Memoriam

She spent hours with the arrangement, straightening the pleats, smoothing folds, the ribbon's curl just so beneath the chin.
In fastening the bonnet, her hand brushed for a second against cold skin, and she flinched, then bustled on amid the frills, blaming the glare of lamps for the stillness beneath the christening robes.

And when, finally she moved away leaving the photographer to do his best with his quiet subject, she was blinded
by the flash.
Or did she see in harsh illumination all those evenings drawing in,
resting in her chair, staring at the frame upon the mantel?

Grafton Street, January 1996

in memory of Pat Tierney

No wonderland, this.
It's rained for weeks now, setting records and expressions of despair on faces disappearing into collars and downward stares.

Half-hearted vendors hawk the remnants of their wares, while buskers barely raise their voices above a whisper, huddling against shopfronts, clutching Styrofoam and nodding at infrequent clinks of change.

The only colour is your red ribboning the lamp-posts on this street and the yellow flowers painted on the mug lying broken at the feet of the woman sleeping in the chemist's doorway.

Five Nations

Tonight she's kitted out with extra care, this highlight of the sporting calendar demands attention to the finer details.
Her make-up is flawless too, cheekbones resurface in a pool of blush, narrow eyes arced with pencil into wide surprise.

She meets the others in a coffee bar, (espresso's better as it doesn't smear) to talk pack strategy, discuss formation and the game plan, which is elegantly plain: first quarter to identify the prey, send off the opposition by half-time, on final whistle, divvy up the spoils.

The pub's just down the road.
They put their shoulders to its heavy oak and heave into a solid scrum of backs and forwards swarming round the bar.
The ball is well in play, but she's dismayed to quickly tot the score – there are too many players on the pitch.

Regroup outside the door, adjusting outfits mauled in the last ruck.
But she is not deterred, the night's just started and the season's young, the triple crown remains unwon and possessing club concessions may avert the wooden spoon ...

She takes a taxi, ignores the driver, then responds with grunts as she replays the evening's highlights in her head: a pass, one fumble of the ball, a perfect setdown by the public phone, three tries and one conversion and a rematch, next time home.

Pauline's Pilgrimage

for Pauline Farrell Hughes

I had more doubts than Thomas on the day that followed resurrection although the sun had read the script, dancing its two-step in the painted sky and day-old lambs knew the routine, skipping their choreographed beat through neatly-mown fields.

The concrete seats of Firhouse and Knocklyon only minutes down the mountain from this bible back-drop, where lime-washed houses nestled into hills and roads curved wide to oblige a stream's meandering.

Landmark by landmark passed as your topography took shape.
There was the reservoir at Glenasmole, the bridge your grandpa strode across when Farrells were the lords in Castlekelly and Liverpool a place you'd hear about in pubs or at the back of Mass.

Here was the house, squat and low-roofed, tiny windows squeezing in the light, brown-stained walls and Guinness adverts, straw adding texture to the flags where sheep-dogs skulked for scraps.

We sat for tea around the kitchen table, a ceremony of figrolls and buttered bread.
The farmer had read the stage directions, knowing more about your family than all your Aunties' memories put together.

I watched your face, envied the spark that had ignited when we'd reached this valley, and now shone brightly as you listened, matching names and recollections, filling in the gaps.
And cursed my sneers, my curt dismissal of your quest as I assessed the likely mileage of a journey to my past.

Waterbaby

Annaghmakerrig, June 1998

Your call this godforsaken hour has roused me from a stubborn curl of tossed sheets.
You're off to take a dip – a lake that large has to be good for something.

Your voice sounds strained, excitement reined in as you hint of complications.
But it's a public phone so I must wait to hear the details which I'll pick over with the wine and cottage cheese I muster to welcome you home.

I see you, hair piled high as you move in slowtime, draped in an African throw like some tropical bird off course in Monaghan.

You blend into the water, your languid stroke so smooth no ripples break the surface as you flow where I can't follow to the centre of the lake.

Flute-fixing In McNeills Of Capel Street

I would have passed it by – secreted between pound shops, purveyors of pine or fifty types of trainer.
But you knew the way, easing the heavy door, leading me in.

Time was suspended with the notes as light slipped in through timbered slats and varnish teased our noses till our breath was pure mahogany.

The job was not yet done.
He twined the hemp, unwound and twined again around the bevilled shaft, retouched with beeswax so the cord stayed moist and pliant as he talked of sessions, of bodhrans played in the Sligo style.

As he worked you browsed from shelf to shelf, ear cocked to some internal tune among the lutes and mandolins till a bouzouki's soundboard curved to swell a song you promised I might one day sing.

Set 'Em Up Joe

I shouldn't try to smoke.
The fumes get in my eyes, upset my pose just long enough to lose the thread and though I know that I should memorise the words he's said, a woman's laughter loud across the bar, the strains of banjo or a mandolin, the liquid misting in my spirit glass, all distract me from the tact with which he spins his line.

So I nod at suitable intervals, arrange my rictus in a practised grin, three parts wryness to one part gin will ease the regret.

But I won't bemoan the loss of what was never there, and blame the knot that's bothered me for weeks on some food past its sell-by date.
Those sleepless nights just mean I need to get more exercise, and if I play Sinatra once or twice, well, what of that?

If I slow down while driving past his flat, the traffic's heavier in that part of town, and should I turn and scan the bar for a familiar frown, it's a habit I'll disown if challenged.
And when I remember how he felt brushing my earlobes with a fleeting kiss, I'll raise my collar tight around my throat, and hail the barman for another shot.

Time Passing On The 2.15

You'll never see the man again who sat across from you, shifting cheek to cheek for a half hour as he sighed himself to sleep against the window, sweater balled into a pillow.

If alone, your gaze fixed longer than you meant on the couple of there, his fingers keeping table beat to the rhythm of her caress, their eyes downcast on Sunday supplements, better to look away, take stock, inventories of luggage, sleeping bags, the floral over-nighter.

By day you trace the shift in landscape, watch the city eke away, not bothered to take up the chase as field gives way to field and sea keeps up a sideline commentary, ragged resorts echoing the off season.
But night-time's something else, windows loath to yield more than your reflection.
You catch your eye, look guiltily away.

You know you're near before the tannoy cuts the murmurs by the rustling of trophies bagged at the weekend, the gathering of coats, rearrangement of expressions by the onward bound.

I Amn't Getting Old ...

This aching thumb is just an aberration, pain lingering for the summer because it had no place to go; innocent, I'm sure,
of arthritic design.

It's just another confirmation that I am my mother's daughter, like the way my mouth sets tight and crooked when I have to back the car, or how I pour for strangers with a dedicated air.
Why I can't stand concrete and would go for miles to see a bit of green.

Although it's only natural that I've learned my mother's habits, I wonder if free will must always fail to pass the genetic test.

The Queen of Number 63¹

You've lived here longer than the longest memory, more fixed in Number 63 than the elk-head glowering its bony greeting in the hall, carved deeper in the Georgian stone than sheelaghs gaping Christian warnings on the slabs lining the meeting room above.

You spent a childhood here, invisible, hiding behind doors or peering through the stairs at worthies in their furs and feathers gliding unaware they were spied upon by a stowaway.
As you grew you slipped into the routine, learning to pour for forty at a time, not a drop spilt.

You hadn't lost that skill when I worked there, though 50 years had passed; no one, not even you, was sure of the true chronology. Furs and feathers had been replaced by cords and denim worn by a newer breed of Antiquarian, though they still liked biscuits with their learning.

Your visits were the high points of our mornings, arrival always heralded by a scratching on the door, a flurry of small dogs, oblivious as you spoke about the weather, to the frowns of sepia faces on the walls.
Later we watched your progress from the window, hauled with terrier toughness down Merrion Square.

In the afternoons, with sunlight floating motes and picking out gilt titles on the shelves, your blue housecoat caught my eye through the warped glass, as you cut grass or crouched amid the marigolds, gathering up the seeds with mother's care.

It's years since I last pulled the door behind me, heard its muffled thunder echoing in the hall.
But when we meet, halted in my tracks by the twinkle in your eye, you read my lips and I am lost in all that laughter following in your train.

¹ 63 Merrion Square, home of the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland and of Mrs Christina Behan, its housekeeper for over 50 years.

Going Home

She always came this way, knew the short cuts like the back of her hand, charted her steps by the accuracy of a bent twig, trusting directions from a fallen leaf.

She came here in all seasons, was the first to see the promise of another spring in shoots forcing their way through a burial of leaves.
At their descent she'd been the chief mourner.

In summer, when the shadows deepened green, she filled nostrils with the scent of remember pleasures. had always anticipated that there would be others.

What was there to fear in that wood where darkness was just a trick of the light?
Why should she have paused on such a mundane course from bus to house?

Language Lessons In A Rathfarnham Chipper

The door swings wide for him, sixtyish and slight, green overalls, a whiff of compost following as he hands the fiver to the man behind the counter.
“Una bella giornata, Luigi”, pronounced in best Rathfarnhamese.

He states his order, than they chew the fat and Luigi stirs. I catch odd syllables, guess prospects for a better day domani and the season’s flower crop, nod tacit agreement primavera’s in the air.

One last salute, thumb and fingers prised before he leaves.
I meet Luigi’s eye.
“You speak Italian?”
Ah, that is a pity.
Mick the florist, he say it is the language of love.”

I spot him as I head back to the car.
He sorts the long stem flowers, mouthing the latest phrase: La bella luna.
And all the while Luigi ladles oil, savouring the words:
Daphne, Dianthus, Centaurea, Cleome, Muscari, Primula, Rosa.

Smithfield Saturday

for my father

He only took this route in early mornings, haring through green lights and the occasional red as if we owned the paper-strewn streets.
But when we crossed the bridge our car gave way to rumbling juggernauts.
Forklifts turned laden pallets on a penny through plastic-ribboned doors.

Following at a distance, we clutched hands, obeyed his curt commands over roaring engines and the baritone of traders.
Nearer, burning rubber and diesel fumes were laced with citrus mixed with the sweet breath of ripe bananas, the damp-earth odour of potato sacks.

Inside, we ranged from stall to stall, Aladdins counting out the loot, hovering once the choice was made, the crate jemmied to reveal its crinkle-papered hoard.
Our father, transformed to haggler, picked up the fruit and sniffed each expertly, his voice in muted undertone for the transaction.

He always knew his man, exchanging racing tips before the spit and handshake polished off the deal.
Back past rows of exotica we never tasted, past straw-filled crates showing labels garish with palm-trees and pyramids, arguing the toss on whether Jaffa was the place or just a trader's name.

Inis Maan At Noon

A sparrow taking flight makes head turn as its whirr of wings sends ripples through the stillness.
A lazy wave, foam breaking upon shingle on a distant beach, sounds close enough to feel the mist of spray upon my face.
A single tractor throbbing into life starts a chain of sound across this place:
the donkey's throaty bray, the knife-sharp sea-bird caoin, the transistor-tinny peal of angelus.

Keepsake

After this is over I'll sift the leavings, searching through the butts, the ash and dried-out lemon rinds for something more than hangovers and inscribed books to remember you by.

If I find a nugget in the silt, its gleam a pale reflection of the light of raindrops on that busker's plate the day we followed sounds down alleyways,

I'll handle it with care, smoothing and polishing till it shines brighter than the memories that made it, and it fits the vacant setting in the chain around my neck.

After

Calling it was the easy thing ...

Naming the ways we had derailed ourselves, words filling up the gap when gestures faltered, projecting futures where we'd meet like people who had known each other once.

At the Waterfall ...

Did you know as we stood in the deepest spot, looked at the steep rush of water over rock that each second staggered with the weight of what could not be said, that a hand-touch threatened our wary truce till the cold stone we leant against forced me to unwonted nimbleness.
Better to clamber and to slip than wait to hear your breathing, pace your rhythms once again.

A room of one's own ...

A day can pass here recording small events, a robin threading worms, a leaf buffeted by a breeze's whim, dusk gathering it in with others.

Silly Me ...

to think the beech would shiver differently today.
It's felt the breeze for aeons though the leaves still tremble to that touch.

Why expect another shade of blue behind those tossed-sheet clouds?

Imagine thinking that the sun might dance or my face would give the game away.

If I remember not to smile.

Some Day ...

And waking just the same, finishing the phrase that I'd dozed off to.

Some day
this time will seem fleeting.
I'll marvel once again how short the hours, forget, consign to phase the ticking into days, weeks, the quiet listening to me breathe.

Staring
at the shelves, rearranging pieces for the umpteenth.
Resolving
once again,
swearing every day
I'll wake renewed, thoughts washed clean ...

Sancreed Well

A mouth into the earth, a gape of flags beside the rubble of the early church.
No other sign, no fragment cloths tied to twigs with faith.
Just steps deep down, worn slippy by the weight of pilgrim hopes and the steady drip, the water-carried beat of prayer.
In the clammy air nowhere to look but down, deep down into the blackened pool, and in the moss-lined font nothing to see but your own face, staring your rippled question back at you.

At Bandelier, New Mexico

600 years late we keep their path, climb to their caves, skirt the red stone dimpled and carved with flat-eyed petroglyphs, wondering at the ceremonies woven in kevas.²

Cliffs rise to scrub, overlook the canyon where a stream fissures life.
A rustle in the bush, a deer, gaze casual, shows who's intruder here.

Did they dream us in their loom, scratch our outline with the watersnakes?

² A ceremonial chamber used for Anastasi Indian weaving rituals

I Looked At You Today

I looked at you today.
Something about the way you sat prolonged my stare beyond the hasty glance we keep for those we love.

Those crisscross lines that stretch from neck to cheek were not there yesterday, I'd swear.
When did you take the colour from your hair?
What happened to your hands?

I looked at you today, I really looked.
And in the course of all our chat an ache began and grew and swelled until it was all that I could do to hid behind my disbelieving eyes.

Portrait Of The Artist's Mother

A glance says she's asleep, but closer viewing shows the gaping mouth, the awkward angle of the pillowed head, the pain-carved lines, the near suspension of the final breath.

Caught by charcoal to while away the hours by the hospital bed, and afterwards he neatly framed and hung it where the light would catch those tidy coal-strokes of the dead.

Only Silence

I search for words:
to tell how leaves must cede their greenness to a harder brown, before crumbling into next year's growth.

How countless insects know there is a time to mummify, then wait to split about their shrouds and emerge fluttering.

How the moon's sickle cannot hide the ghostly outline of its fuller self.
How waves that edge high-water mark will soon retreat, leaving the stone bare.

I search for words,
trawling for metaphors to package up your grief in neat parcels.

But I owe you more, so all I offer is my silence, leave the soothing to the crawl of time.

Margaret's Bar

We keep a nice place here.
So clean you could eat a sandwich off the counter.
As many do who call, the times I've run my cloth across it, catching crumbs before they fall.

We get a grand crowd in.
Plain, ordinary, no airs or graces, liking a quiet pint, the odd tune when Johnny's in the corner. No ruffraff and no city crowd, demanding service like they own the house.

They come bank holidays, lads who've had their fill, young ones hanging off them.
They've no respect, those girls, if their mothers knew what they got up to at my bar, the times I've shamed them.

One pair I mind well – it was the August festival and the rain swelled the crowd jostling for stools.
The two of them at it, could have been anywhere for all they cared, 'ating each other.

And Mickey B. going redder than the lemonade I poured into his Jameson. I knew the score, aiming a swift hit with the Taylor Keith on their arms and heads, watching them jerk apart.
“Not in my bar”, says I.

But what I like best is calling time, seeing the last man out, bolting the doors, restoring quiet till I make the tea, kettle whistling, wireless crackling on to other night-times.

Old Maids' Tales

It happened to other people.
She'd see the first stirrings on a friend's face, familiar features shift to strangeness, private, inaccessible to third parties.

It only happens when you aren't looking

She'd trace her own shape, search for answers in a curve of lip (too small, too straight) the carriage of her back.

Boys don't like bright girls.

As she grew it settled on her, comfortable
as a shapeless frock, her fate
as watcher, minder of bags and pints, organiser of groups she'd view maternally.

You have so many friends

Abandoning the search so nobody might confuse independence for something else.

Her smile fixed, secure she had it sussed.

What's for you won't pass you

she said.

The Carer

After, when we'd shaken off the clay, though chill remained to spite the late spring day, I climbed once more the steep and narrow stairs to your room.

Perfume, proudly displayed, unopened, a gift from the niece in London.
Abba records I never heard you play.
Your picture of Padre Pio.

And dolls.
Stiff-backed and glassy-eyed, dressed in costume of countries you never got to see.
Never expected to.

A layer of dust the only sign of absence.
Personal effects laid out under the gaze of mourners.

Bedtime in Commons Road

The last step was the hardest.
You would build momentum on the earlier ones, body crouched for the ascent as if defying gravity by will alone.
Metal handles placed above each stair became the irons in this Everest climb.
Fingers, purple
under flaking parchment, hooked each grip with improbable strength.
Legs, in crumpled nylon (heels half-out of slippers) obeyed your imperative with every lift.
The landing plateaued into promised rest, but one last heave was needed.

You'd pause, muttered imprecations growing strong:
Oh God,
God help me.
Now, before the final swing of back and porous hips brought safety for another night.

Kelp

at the bathhouse in Enniscrone

Gasping I take the first step, hesitant before the green I must immerse in, toeing my way through fronds as I settle in deeper, feeling the fringes insinuate, caress me till I respond, lowering myself further, weaving a seaweed skin around arms and legs, between, inhaling the salty breath, then tonguing it in.

Lying back, I drift to the last time I was here, the final family holiday before we gave up togetherness and picnics on the beach.

It rained two days in every three of that grey fortnight, filling the old Austin with a fog of mutiny, steamed up windows keeping the scenery out.

Back to the bar of the hotel, to the thrill of deep-fried chips and ketchup in metal bowls and all the Fanta orange we could drink till our blood froze with the first drone of the accordion.

And the adults perking up, pushing us onto the floor, “Go on there, strut your stuff, show them what Jackeens can do,” our limbs petrified with shyness jerking us towards the door.

But there could be no escape from the spotty boys cross the hall who dragged us round the room to the “Walls of Limerick” till we were redder than the velvet curtains keeping the starlight in.

The baths weren't opened then.
We found our seaweed on the strand, kicked it idly on the sea's edge, watched its oil bubble on the sand.

Aran Wedding

The clocks went back the morning afterwards.
The island slept it off, turning over with a sigh of wind easing after last night's gales while clouds, blanketing the sun in dormant grey, prolonged the slumber for another hour.
A sheepdog sentry dozed on limestone wall.
Oyster catchers, posed in piebald flocks, cocked eyes seaward for approaching boats but nothing flecked the blur of sea and sky stretching unfocussed to the Galway coast.

The Mourners

One summer, your ragged gang of sisters and brothers leaned every day for weeks across the moss-flecked stone bridging the river to watch the bloating body of the family pet slowly progress through slime-scurfed water.

Sometimes you stretched immobile on the sun-warmed stone, as if afraid your motion might displace the air and wake the sleeping beast.
More often you were armed with sticks and rocks, vying with one another to nudge the dog another inch along its solemn procession.

Each day a little further down the river till boredom stiffened limbs and pulled you back to football fields and shrill-pitched games of tag.
But next morning you'd resume your avid viewing, as if you already knew, there would be other vigils.

Remembering Jack

1964-1997

Jack's dead.
What more to say,
break bread, sip Evian and scan the menu of our lives, comparing notes on mobile phones and bank imbalances.

But if memories are thrust at us like coins on tabletops, let it be of lengthy lunches, sunny afternoons, deadlines missed,
the gold you wore,
your khaki grace gliding across the office floor to pin-striped whispers.

Anything but your age, the child left,
the plans unmade.

No, just muse on possibilities, good eateries,
some ruse to beat ennui, recharge the batteries, just chill.

Lament For A Shy Man

He would have hated this, the man who turned his face to hedgerows rather than risk a greeting on a country road.
It would be another death to know the details of his life were being discussed over breakfast, at church gates, in hazy snugs as far as Moate and Mullingar.

Wicklow Gap, Easter 1998

On we drive, silence punctured
by staccato chat, internal monologues filling the car.

We'd posed, earlier, found the Pipers' Stones in Easter sunshine, breathed the ice-tinged air, caressed stray fleece on blackthorn.

You'd stretched your arm, folding me in again to your warm centre, holding me as my hands homed in with old instinct to your stomach's swell.

We drive where clouds detach from hills and snowdrops glint in fractal light until we start our journey back wordless.

Slipping Skin

I prefer the snake's routine.
She has enough of one scene or another so she gives a shrug and shimmies out of skin, discards a dried out sheath coiled in the mark of a question she's not bothered answering.

Death of a Walnut Tree

Long before we came you stood majestic against the winter sky, summer skin peeled back to show the vein-intricate hardness of a thousand branches.

We thought it would last forever, named our houses after you, grew complacent that the view would always be enjoyed.

It could have been a lightning bolt that hollowed the ancient wood, cleaving deep until all life had been burnt out and arms fell sideways in unstoppable embrace of earth.

Or else it was fatigue that split your centre, a shrugging off of birth, growth, death, all those cycles.
Perhaps the guilt was ours.
Putting down our roots did we cut off the nutrients that kept you fed?

But I have lost my pole-star, the point my eyes would turn to in the Sunday morning sun, or on moonlit week-nights when your shadow dwarfed my weary coming home.
Now all that's left is vacant sky and rooks, picking through the rubble of their quake-hit lives.

Good Friday Gift

A different silence, this three o'clock quiet that descends on streets emptied by annual devotions.
The only rumble a pilgrim straggler, later for stations or the journey south or west.

Today I have no destination, no beauty spots to visit and no prayers to say, but in this noiseless room I trace my ley-lines on a wooden cup, finger-tip embrace the wax-buffed offering of a turner's lathe.

From my window
I can see the spot
the tree once stood, filtering the light that now shines brightly on the sheen of walnut.

An unexpected gift, this chalice for Good Friday.
Yet I do not dare to pour into the vessel, for fear my profane brew would stain blood-red the bond timber.

But this cup gives proof of other resurrections: nothing that is lost cannot be found.

Just Another Saturday

Nothing strange, no change of order in the routine of rising, showering awake, newspaper browsing, the alchemy of the coffee machine, choosing CDs to ease me through the drift to early afternoon.
The sunlight gives no clues.
I've tossed aside the supplement before I realise I haven't thought of you.

Bar Talk

The wood was soft beneath by touch, that chipped mahogany we leant against for hours, until the clock outpaced our talk and blinked last orders and the persistent drone of “time now” wove into the background hum of shadows fading in and out of the surrounding smoke.

For all that haze there was a glow, brighter than the brassy sheen of bar-rails or the honeyed gold that lined the glasses we caressed upon the counter.
And there was an ease about you, lightly resting weight on elbows, back curved outwards in that miracle of space.

And I would have stayed there, though I had other haunts to visit, other arguments to settle, other brands to try.
A chill crept in as crowds pushed out and the barman’s till rang up its final toll.

Biography

Nessa O'Mahony was born in Dublin. Her poetry has appeared in a number of Irish, UK, and North American periodicals, has been translated into several European languages, and has been broadcast by RTÉ radio. She won the National Women's Poetry Competition in 1997 and was shortlisted for the Patrick Kavanagh Prize and Hennessy Literature Awards. Her first poetry collection, "Bar Talk", was first published by iTaLiCs Press in Dublin in 1999. Her second, "Trapping a Ghost", was published by bluechrome publishing in Spring 2005. She was awarded an Irish Arts Council literature bursary in 2004. She is Assistant Editor of UK literary journal Orbis, she edits the online literary journal, Electric Acorn and teaches creative writing at the University of Wales, Bangor.

CREATIVE COMMONS LEGAL CODE

Attribution-NonCommercial-NoDerivs 2.5

CREATIVE COMMONS CORPORATION IS NOT A LAW FIRM AND DOES NOT PROVIDE LEGAL SERVICES. DISTRIBUTION OF THIS LICENSE DOES NOT CREATE AN ATTORNEY-CLIENT RELATIONSHIP. CREATIVE COMMONS PROVIDES THIS INFORMATION ON AN "AS-IS" BASIS. CREATIVE COMMONS MAKES NO WARRANTIES REGARDING THE INFORMATION PROVIDED, AND DISCLAIMS LIABILITY FOR DAMAGES RESULTING FROM ITS USE.

License

THE WORK (AS DEFINED BELOW) IS PROVIDED UNDER THE TERMS OF THIS CREATIVE COMMONS PUBLIC LICENSE ("CCPL" OR "LICENSE"). THE WORK IS PROTECTED BY COPYRIGHT AND/OR OTHER APPLICABLE LAW. ANY USE OF THE WORK OTHER THAN AS AUTHORIZED UNDER THIS LICENSE OR COPYRIGHT LAW IS PROHIBITED.

BY EXERCISING ANY RIGHTS TO THE WORK PROVIDED HERE, YOU ACCEPT AND AGREE TO BE BOUND BY THE TERMS OF THIS LICENSE. THE LICENSOR GRANTS YOU THE RIGHTS CONTAINED HERE IN CONSIDERATION OF YOUR ACCEPTANCE OF SUCH TERMS AND CONDITIONS.

1. Definitions

1. "Collective Work" means a work, such as a periodical issue, anthology or encyclopedia, in which the Work in its entirety in unmodified form, along with a number of other contributions, constituting separate and independent works in themselves, are assembled into a collective whole. A work that constitutes a Collective Work will not be considered a Derivative Work (as defined below) for the purposes of this License.

2. "Derivative Work" means a work based upon the Work or upon the Work and other pre-existing works, such as a translation, musical arrangement, dramatization, fictionalization, motion picture version, sound recording, art reproduction, abridgment, condensation, or any other form in which the Work may be recast, transformed, or adapted, except that a work that constitutes a Collective Work will not be considered a Derivative Work for the purpose of this License. For the avoidance of doubt, where the Work is a musical composition or sound recording, the synchronization of the Work in timed-relation with a moving image ("synching") will be considered a Derivative Work for the purpose of this License.

3. "Licensor" means the individual or entity that offers the Work under the terms of this License.

4. "Original Author" means the individual or entity who created the Work.

5. "Work" means the copyrightable work of authorship offered under the terms of this License.

6. "You" means an individual or entity exercising rights under this License who has not previously violated the terms of this License with respect to the Work, or who has received express permission from the Licensor to exercise rights under this License despite a previous violation.

2. Fair Use Rights. Nothing in this license is intended to reduce, limit, or restrict any rights arising from fair use, first sale or other limitations on the exclusive rights of the copyright owner under copyright law or other applicable laws.

3. License Grant. Subject to the terms and conditions of this License, Licensor hereby grants You a worldwide, royalty-free, non-exclusive, perpetual (for the duration of the applicable copyright) license to exercise the rights in the Work as stated below:

1. to reproduce the Work, to incorporate the Work into one or more Collective Works, and to reproduce the Work as incorporated in the Collective Works;

2. to distribute copies or phonorecords of, display publicly, perform publicly, and perform publicly by means of a digital audio transmission the Work including as incorporated in Collective Works;

The above rights may be exercised in all media and formats whether now known or hereafter devised. The above rights include the right to make such modifications as are technically necessary to exercise the rights in other media and formats, but otherwise you have no rights to make Derivative Works. All rights not expressly granted by Licensor are hereby reserved, including but not limited to the rights set forth in Sections 4(d) and 4(e).

4. Restrictions. The license granted in Section 3 above is expressly made subject to and limited by the following restrictions:

1. You may distribute, publicly display, publicly perform, or publicly digitally perform the Work only under the terms of this License, and You must include a copy of, or the Uniform Resource Identifier for, this License with every copy or phonorecord of the Work You distribute, publicly display, publicly perform, or publicly digitally perform. You may not offer or impose any terms on the Work that alter or restrict the terms of this License or the recipients' exercise of the rights granted hereunder. You may not sublicense the Work. You must keep intact all notices that refer to this License and to the disclaimer of warranties. You may not distribute, publicly display, publicly perform, or publicly digitally perform the Work with any technological measures that control access or use of the Work in a manner inconsistent with the terms of this License Agreement. The above applies to the Work as incorporated in a Collective Work, but this does not require the Collective Work apart from the Work itself to be made subject to the terms of this License. If You create a Collective Work, upon notice from any Licensor You must, to the extent practicable, remove from the Collective Work any credit as required by clause 4(c), as requested.

2. You may not exercise any of the rights granted to You in Section 3 above in any manner that is primarily intended for or directed toward commercial advantage or private monetary compensation. The exchange of the Work for other copyrighted works by means of digital file-sharing or otherwise shall not be considered to be intended for or directed toward commercial advantage or private monetary compensation, provided there is no payment of any monetary compensation in connection with the exchange of copyrighted works.

3. If you distribute, publicly display, publicly perform, or publicly digitally perform the Work, You must keep intact all copyright notices for the Work and provide, reasonable to the medium or means You are utilizing: (i) the name of the Original Author (or pseudonym, if applicable) if supplied, and/or (ii) if the Original Author and/or Licensor designate another party or parties (e.g. a sponsor institute, publishing entity, journal) for attribution in Licensor's copyright notice, terms of service or by other reasonable means, the name of such party or parties; the title of the Work if supplied; and to the extent reasonably practicable, the Uniform Resource Identifier, if any, that Licensor specifies to be associated with the Work, unless such URI does not refer to the copyright notice or licensing information for the Work. Such credit may be implemented in any reasonable manner; provided, however, that in the case of a Collective Work, at a minimum such credit will appear where any other comparable authorship credit appears and in a manner at least as prominent as such other comparable authorship credit.

4. For the avoidance of doubt, where the Work is a musical composition:

1. Performance Royalties Under Blanket Licenses. Licensor reserves the exclusive right to collect, whether individually or via a performance rights society (e.g. ASCAP, BMI, SESAC), royalties for the public performance or public digital performance (e.g. webcast) of the Work if that performance is primarily intended for or directed toward commercial advantage or private monetary compensation.

2. Mechanical Rights and Statutory Royalties. Licensor reserves the exclusive right to collect, whether individually or via a music rights agency or designated agent (e.g. Harry Fox Agency), royalties for any phonorecord You create from the Work ("cover version") and distribute, subject to the compulsory license created by 17 USC Section 115 of the US Copyright Act (or the equivalent in other jurisdictions), if Your distribution of such cover version is primarily intended for or directed toward commercial advantage or private monetary compensation.

5. Webcasting Rights and Statutory Royalties. For the avoidance of doubt, where the Work is a sound recording, Licensor reserves the exclusive right to collect, whether individually or via a performance-rights society (e.g. SoundExchange), royalties for the public digital performance (e.g. webcast) of the Work, subject to the compulsory license created by 17 USC Section 114 of the US Copyright Act (or the equivalent in other jurisdictions), if Your public digital performance is primarily intended for or directed toward commercial advantage or private monetary compensation.

5. Representations, Warranties and Disclaimer

UNLESS OTHERWISE MUTUALLY AGREED BY THE PARTIES IN WRITING, LICENSOR OFFERS THE WORK AS-IS AND MAKES NO REPRESENTATIONS OR WARRANTIES OF ANY KIND CONCERNING THE WORK, EXPRESS, IMPLIED, STATUTORY OR OTHERWISE, INCLUDING, WITHOUT LIMITATION, WARRANTIES OF TITLE, MERCHANTABILITY, FITNESS FOR A PARTICULAR PURPOSE, NON-INFRINGEMENT, OR THE ABSENCE OF LATENT OR OTHER DEFECTS, ACCURACY, OR THE PRESENCE OF ABSENCE OF ERRORS, WHETHER OR NOT DISCOVERABLE. SOME JURISDICTIONS DO NOT ALLOW THE EXCLUSION OF IMPLIED WARRANTIES, SO SUCH EXCLUSION MAY NOT APPLY TO YOU.

6. Limitation on Liability. EXCEPT TO THE EXTENT REQUIRED BY APPLICABLE LAW, IN NO EVENT WILL LICENSOR BE LIABLE TO YOU ON ANY LEGAL THEORY FOR ANY SPECIAL, INCIDENTAL, CONSEQUENTIAL, PUNITIVE OR EXEMPLARY DAMAGES ARISING OUT OF THIS LICENSE OR THE USE OF THE WORK, EVEN IF LICENSOR HAS BEEN ADVISED OF THE POSSIBILITY OF SUCH DAMAGES.

7. Termination

1. This License and the rights granted hereunder will terminate automatically upon any breach by You of the terms of this License. Individuals or entities who have received Collective Works from You under this License, however, will not have their licenses terminated provided such individuals or entities remain in full compliance with those licenses. Sections 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, and 8 will survive any termination of this License.

2. Subject to the above terms and conditions, the license granted here is perpetual (for the duration of the applicable copyright in the Work). Notwithstanding the above, Licensor reserves the right to release the Work under different license terms or to stop distributing the Work at any time; provided, however that any such election will not serve to withdraw this License (or any other license that has been, or is required to be, granted under the terms of this License), and this License will continue in full force and effect unless terminated as stated above.

8. Miscellaneous

1. Each time You distribute or publicly digitally perform the Work or a Collective Work, the Licensor offers to the recipient a license to the Work on the same terms and conditions as the license granted to You under this License.

2. If any provision of this License is invalid or unenforceable under applicable law, it shall not affect the validity or enforceability of the remainder of the terms of this License, and without further action by the parties to this agreement, such provision shall be reformed to the minimum extent necessary to make such provision valid and enforceable.

3. No term or provision of this License shall be deemed waived and no breach consented to unless such waiver or consent shall be in writing and signed by the party to be charged with such waiver or consent.

4. This License constitutes the entire agreement between the parties with respect to the Work licensed here. There are no understandings, agreements or representations with respect to the Work not specified here. Licensor shall not be bound by any additional provisions that may appear in any communication from You. This License may not be modified without the mutual written agreement of the Licensor and You.

Creative Commons is not a party to this License, and makes no warranty whatsoever in connection with the Work. Creative Commons will not be liable to You or any party on any legal theory for any damages whatsoever, including without limitation any general, special, incidental or consequential damages arising in connection to this license. Notwithstanding the foregoing two (2) sentences, if Creative Commons has expressly identified itself as the Licensor hereunder, it shall have all rights and obligations of Licensor.

Except for the limited purpose of indicating to the public that the Work is licensed under the CCPL, neither party will use the trademark "Creative Commons" or any related trademark or logo of Creative Commons without the prior written consent of Creative Commons. Any permitted use will be in compliance with Creative Commons' then-current trademark usage guidelines, as may be published on its website or otherwise made available upon request from time to time.

Creative Commons may be contacted at <http://creativecommons.org/>.